When I get reports a couple of times a week from one insurance company or another, or packets and packets telling me what to do, it's not useful. It's all so fragmented that we just can't sort out signal and noise. The more these groups work together and give us consolidated reports like these, the more useful it is. -- Kristen Dillon, MD

We take diabetes patients off our registry if they are getting care from an endocrinologist. We weren't able to identify patients that weren't getting this care until we got our reports. We were able to send that information to the primary care provider and reestablish care. -- Susan Clack, MD Pacific Medical Group
